

Writing week 3, activity 4 - WAGOLL

Dear Prince Pondicherry,

Thank you for your letter, which I received via chocolate post early this morning.

I would be delighted of course, to come to India and build you a palace made entirely from chocolate - what a marvellous request!

Would one hundred rooms be sufficient?

First and foremost, my plan would be to construct the enormous building using giant, individual chocolate bars, stacked carefully and held together with thick, melted chocolate which would dry as hard as cement. As you glance up, the beautifully decorated ceilings would each be sheets of white and dark chocolate, hand-carved by my faithful workers. In every room, the window frames would (of course) be made from the finest chocolate, coloured and textured to look like real wood, with boiled sugar windows as clear as sparkling glass. Covering the floors, will be the most luxurious carpets made from the softest chocolate flakes that will cushion your feet as you walk. When it is time for bed, you will sink into the most delicate, silky chocolate mattress filled with even more chocolate flakes than you can ever imagine! In every area of the palace, there will be sumptuous furniture, crafted out of solid blocks of chocolate to your exact taste and design. Along every wall, each picture and portrait will be recreated with a stunning combination of a white chocolate canvas, painted in vivid colours with edible paints. Finally, in each one of the many bathrooms, upon turning on the taps, you will release a liquid stream of rich, velvety hot chocolate!

Although this may be one of my most fabulous creations, even I, the fantastic Willy Wonka, has not yet been able to discover the secret of unmeltable chocolate. Therefore I must warn you - you must start eating the palace and all its fittings as soon as possible, before the hot sun melts it all!

With best wishes,

Mr Willy Wonka
